The daisy is the Legion's official flower; the poppy is the Auxiliary's American Legion adopted the dalsy as its official flower on the grounds that the daisy is an American flower and the poppy of Flanders is available for use only in artificial form.

The Legion Auxiliary has taken advantage of the very fact that the poppy is not available as a real flower to buy artificial flowers made by disabled soldiers in hospitals. The Massachusetts Legion and Auxiliary netted something over $46,000 from the sale of artificial popples, last winter. This money was used to better the conditions of sick and needy veterans of the World war.

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS "WELSH RABBIT"

THE name of the dish composed of melted cheese with the addition of sundry sauces and piquant flavorings is usually "rarebit"-an error due to the fact that persons who could see no resemblance be-tween their favorite midnight repast and a hare which came from Wales concluded that it must be a "rare bit." Even Worcester and Webster were formerly guilty of this mistake, until an examination of Continental colloquialisms showed the-wool slang term, belonging to the same class as a consider able number of other, but less well-known names applied to the favorite dishes of various communities. In England, for example, they refer to a sheep's head stewed with onlons as a "German duck," while a bagpudding is a "Lelscestershire plover" and "Norfolk capon" is eatinghouse slang for a herring. Following the same school of rough wit, the French call a herring a "poulet de careme" or "Lenten chicken" and the Italians reverse this process, referring to a chicken as a "fish out of the coop." Nor is the custom by any means confined to European countries. The New England habit of speaking of codfish as "Cape Cod turkeys" and the current slang of "Irish confetti" for bricks are two other examples from the same school.

So Welsh "rabbit" it should remain-on account of the fondness of the Welsh for toasted cheese and not because it is a rare bit, or delicacy.
